Dental research and scientific writing is of paramount importance to any institution. And a scientific journal is one of the methods of this expression.

In India, clinical material is enormous and dental faculty large, but lack of documentation and publication of scientific writing is a hindrance to academic growth.

A journal in place puts an added responsibility on a faculty member to keep pre and post documentation of cases and instills him to think in a scientific manner.

Every journal article needs to be peer reviewed and that adds to the scientific credibility of that article. We have striven hard to put in place senior academicians as advisors and reviewers to offer their quality and positive inputs to boost the journal. It is this team effort along with those of the journal committee that makes this exercise a complete team work and a fulfilling academic experience.

In this issue we have introduced a guest article section; this will feature another dimension of clinical expertise of those senior clinicians who will showcase their clinical work and that combined with academic inputs from an institution will makes the journal a holistic reading material.

We are also opening our doors to other institutes to contribute and make this journey a complete scientific one for the betterment of our fraternity.
